Mia Wolfe is an Associate, contributing to projects throughout the firm and its practice areas. She works with clients from a wide array of industry sectors for all of the firm's practice areas.

Prior to joining Shenker, Russo & Clark, Mia was an entrepreneur, managing her own small business. Through her company, she worked with the New York State Office of the Attorney General where she managed a team of forty discovery review attorneys. Her cases included New York State's litigations against Charter Communications, Sprint and the manufacturers and distributors of opioid drugs. She also assisted with the investigations of Juul Labs and Facebook.

In law school she served as the Chairwoman of the William & Mary Media Counsel and as Editor-in-Chief of the law school newspaper, Not Wythe Standing; she also acted as Technical Editor for the William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal.

Before law school she was a public radio journalist reporting for WRVO, an NPR affiliate broadcasting in Syracuse and across Central New York.
